Due to this my design comp is not as clean as I would like and also is not able to incorporate all of the things I would like to see and use on my site. When I actually build my portfolio site, I expect it to be much better and modern than these pictures would indicate because I understand HTML and CSS more and will be able to use web resources and my own knowledge to build a site that does not look like it is from the 90's. In any case, I chose the fonts that I did because they seemed to fit together while still being different enough to indicate separate sections and things like subheaders/body paragraphs. When I build the true site I want to find some nice web-fonts to use. I will still make sure that a web safe font works as a backup. I chose my colors because I am a big fan of light blue and the spectrum works together in many different shades. You can go light, dark, or somewhere in-between and the color palette still is visually appealing. The image I chose to use for the "about me" section is a nice picture in Europe and I think it fits well and is inviting.
